The Business Card

Just a Little Square of Pasteboard,
But It Was Almost Death

By FLOYD GIBBONS

HELLO EVERYBODY:

It was just a business card—a square of pasteboard with a Spanish sounding name printed on it. But it gave Nat Schwartz some of the most terrible moments of his life. Nat lives in Brooklyn, N. Y. His business is living, and here's how he got hold of that card.

On the 11th of April, 1935, Nat flew to Cuba on business. Three days later he flew back and landed his plane at Miami, Fla. The next day, while he was going over his ship at the dock, he was out at the field taking flying instruction came up to him and said: "I hear you were over to Havana with your plane. Did you have trouble getting in or out of the country?"

It was a natural enough question. FLOYD GIBBONS for a revolution was going on in Cuba at the time. Nat discussed the question with his questioner, who said his name was Delgado. When the conversation was ended, Delgado gave Nat his card. Nat stuck it in a pocket with his other papers and forgot about it. But he was to remember it again—not quite a month later.

On May 4, Nat had to fly to Cuba again. He had to go in a hurry this time, so he didn't go through the formality of getting clearance papers. "I thought that if I got caught without them," he says, "I would probably have to pay with a small fine. But little did I know what lay ahead of me then."

Nat landed at Key West and refueled. It was too late to get weather reports, so he had to take a chance on the trip across. His compass and charts showed that he was headed straight for Havana, but when he reached the Cuban Coast he found he had been blown fortyodd miles off his course, and he landed near a town called Hershey.

He was running short of gas and thought he'd better land as soon as he could. He saw a little looking spot, and set the plane down.

"And then," Nat says, "the flying ended. The plane had no more oil in the ground than it was warranted by RUBALES, the Cuban version of our State Police. Nat says he never saw so many RUBALES men in one place in his life. It looked as if the whole Cuban army had come out to meet him. He never saw so many guns in his life, either—and most of them seemed to be pointed straight at the little pocket in the left side of his flying jacket.

It seemed as if they were making an awful fuss about one plane landing for lack of gas. Nat had half a notion to give the men and try to take off again. But another look at those guns convinced him that he'd be adding before the plane could move the amount. He shut off the motor and gave it up.

The RUBALES took Nat to a nearby town and brought him before their COMMANDANTE. Then they began hearing things. It didn't seem to end for time. A revolution for the cause of Dr. Antonio Guiteras was being held in Matanzas with a list of 100 names, and the RUBALES were on the way for him. Guiteras was supposed to have been kidnapped (somebody else wanted to take him) and the RUBALES were supposed to be looking for him. Nat was supposed to be a spy. They had a hard time of it for a while, and Nat was sure he was a spy.

More than likely it had come to take some Guiteras.

And to top it all, Nat had no money to show what his home was in Cuba. He didn't take money but got by working the identity and get him out of that scrape.

But still Nat didn't know the worst of it. He didn't know that he might never get out of that strange place.

The COMMANDANTE of the RUBALES began going through Nat's papers and belongings. A suddenly he came across that business card Delgado had given him. He held on to it, his face red with anger. "You are a spy," he said, "and you come to get Guiteras."

Says Nat: "You could have blown me down with a feather duster. I didn't know what he was talking about. Until a few minutes ago I wouldn't have known whether Guiteras was a fan dancer or a side dish on a Spanish menu. I insisted I was an American. They wouldn't believe me, so I am a spy and look like a Cuban. Besides that, the COMMANDANTE pointed out that so was Guiteras an American. He was born in Philadelphia."

"I swore I did not know him," Nat did NOT come to get him in his plane. But I could have sworn that I was in the face for all the good it did me. I was threatened with the fifth degree—told that I would be put through the mill at the Cuban fortress if I did not talk.

"And I couldn't say a word, for I was not implicated, and wouldn't have known what he was even if I'd wanted to talk. I did find out, though, why the commandante became so excited at the sight of Delgado's card. Delgado was GUITERAS' AGENT IN THE UNITED STATES."

They put Nat in jail. It looked pretty bad for him. Charged in Cuba without Guiteras' papers. Caught in a neighborhood where a plane was supposed to land to smuggle out a rebel whose pockets were full of dollar money.

Found with the card of this man who's agent on his person. Why the commandante was in such a hurry that Nat doubted if even the U. S. Consul would interfere in such a case. For three days Nat lay in jail with no food and no view of the thing again.

"The worst thing of the whole thing was that I was alone. On the third day, Guiteras was caught up with and killed. Then the RUBALES turned out to be a great mistake. The RUBALES had taken him to the States—that he was planning to escape by plane at all."

No matter how bad the trouble against him looked, it just wasn't evidence at all. They let Nat go, and he lost no time getting back to the United States again.

"I never wished Guiteras any bad luck," he says, "but on the other hand I couldn't feel very sad about what had happened to him. If they hadn't caught him, I wouldn't be sitting here writing this yarn today."

Well so, I'm another one who doesn't approve of anything that interferes with a man's writing his adventure story. Write me yours right now. Monday or any day Ray Hopper's story of the sea-going horse.

Floyd Gibbons will pay good money for good TRUE adventure stories. Hundreds of people in Boston and nearby towns have received ten-dollar and hundred-dollar bills for their yarns, and there's no reason why you can't do the same, for, as Floyd says, everybody has had at least one adventure. Charles H. Willey of Concord, N. H., won one hundred and ten dollars for the story of his life's biggest moment, and you can do the same. For further details, see the box at the right side of the page.

Hockey Today and Yesterday

Season of 1910-11 Sets Up Record For Roughness

By ART ROSS

(As Told by 1911 Hockey)

Now, that we've cooled off our tempers, allowed our cuts to heal and have had some of those stitches removed, while dwelling on the part that C. F. Adams had in the development of professional hockey and tracing the game through the various leagues under which it operated, I think we are back in shape and fit to return for some more blond and thunder hockey.

There was a time when the game was played in a more civilized manner. The players were gentlemen, and the game was a sport. But now, it has become a rough and tumble affair.

There have been many changes in the game since the previous year. The players are now more aggressive, and the game is more exciting.

At the conclusion of the season, the players were deadlocked. The game was a tie, and the players were disappointed. But the game was over, and the players were back in shape.

Hall Ruled Out of Game

A month after the season, the players were back in shape. The game was a success, and the players were happy.

And no incident. The game was a success, and the players were happy.

In all probability, the game was a success. The players were happy, and the game was a success.
